Greek cosmetics, beauty products see revival

Greek producers of cosmetics and beauty products have seen a revival in their fortunes thanks to growing exports, a recovery in their home market and a growing worldwide consumer trend towards natural products.

As a result of the country's economic crisis, Greece's roughly 120 cosmetics and beauty product makers witnessed a more than 40% decline in domestic sales to roughly €800 million in 2016 before a recovery began last year. As a result, many turned to overseas markets reflecting a broader trend among Greek companies that has translated into new records in Greek exports.

Last year, Greek exports of cosmetics and beauty products totalled €218 million as beauty product makers expanded internationally. At the signature Cosmoprof Worldwide Bologna exhibition this spring - one of Europe's leading beauty products fairs - Greek companies participated in record numbers. At the Bologna fair, the Greek delegation was the largest in 15 years with 32 companies taking part: a 25% jump from a year earlier and a 50% jump from 2016. Likewise, at the November Cosmoprof Asia exhibition in Hong Kong, there was also strong Greek participation.

Worldwide, Greek cosmetics and beauty product exports have been growing at more than a 2% rate on average over the last two years and in select markets even more. For example, exports to neighboring Cyprus, have grown fourfold in the last decade, according to industry estimates. Asian markets - like China, Korea and Japan -- hold even more promise.

Drawing on Greece's rich flora and biodiversity, Greek beauty product makers have also been expanding into natural beauty products, and have found a receptive world market as consumers increasingly turn to natural and organic products. Greek exports of natural beauty product have been growing at a rate of 20% per year, according to industry experts.

That has also drawn the interest of international investors. In the last two years Greece's two pre-eminent natural cosmetics firms - Korres and Apivita - have been acquired by foreign investors.

Greece to offer incentives for business, service centers

Greece plans to introduce new incentives to attract more business processing and shared service centers to the country, banking on the country's geostrategic position, multilingual workforce and highly skilled service sector.

In the past ten years, since the passing of a law on BPOs and SSCs in 2005, several leading multinational companies – from French business outsourcing giant Teleperformance to American financial services firm First Data – have set up contact centers in Greece.

By offering new incentives, Greece is hoping to expand its presence in the multi-billion dollar global BPO market following countries like India and the Philippines. According to estimates by the BPO Services Global Industry Almanac 2017, the global BPO market was worth approximately $140 billion as of 2016.

Beginning in the 1990s, when major U.S. and European firms began the outsourcing of business processing and contact centers to countries abroad, the industry has helped transform local economies. In the Philippines, for example, more than 1 million people are estimated to be employed in the BPO and SSC sector.

Among the more than 120 call centers currently operating in Greece, the eight largest employ more than 20,000 employees. Teleperformance, which operates in nearly 80 countries, employs more than 6,000 staff in Greece. Its Greek contact center was named best multi-lingual contact center in Europe in 2017.

Greece Meets

China

Greece is continuing to expand its trade and investment ties with China, participating in China's first-ever international import exhibition in November. According to estimates, China – the world's biggest and fastest growing consumer market – will import an additional $40 trillion worth of goods over the next 15 years.

This makes the Chinese market a high priority for Greek exporters. Currently, Greek exports to the country are modest: totaling $420 million in 2017. But that figure represented a 51.7% increase over one year earlier.

In the last decade, Chinese investment in Greece has been growing, starting with the investment in the Piraeus Port container operations by Chinese shipping giant Cosco. Since then, Cosco has announced investment plans for the rest of the port as well. More recently, the China Energy Investment Corporation signed an agreement with the Copelouzos Group to enter the Greek energy market.

Individual Chinese have also been flocking to Greece: both as tourists and as investors. Chinese purchased €258 million worth of Greek real estate in 2017, according to Chinese real estate portal Juwai, and have increased further since.
